The police caught Mr. Corey and another escapee in an isolated house in County Down, 30 miles (50 kilometers) from the prison.

Fifteen of the escapees were recaptured within hours of the breakout. Some of the men were found under water in the nearby Lagan River, naked and breathing through hollow reeds growing on the riverbed. Two men were picked no Monday.

Police sources said before the two escapees were captured Tues-day night that they believed that all the remaining men were trapped within a three-mile (five-kilometer) radins of the prison that was cordoned off immediately after the escape. and the World Bank, Mr. Reagan pushed hard for passage of the leg-islation.

"Let me make something very plain," he told an audience composed of the world's top bankers and financial officials. "I have an unbreakable commitment to in-creased funding for the IMF."

Mr. Reagan said the U.S. also strongly supports the World Bank, and made a brief appeal for funds to continue operations of the bank's International Development Agency. But he carefully avoided making a specific comm that program, scheduled to begin in mid-1984.

On that issue, the World Bank's president, A.W. Clausen, made an impassioned plea in his annual ad-dress to the joint meeting, saying that the U.S. and other major donors who have failed to agree must quickly made a decision "at the political level" or risk "a hiatus" in IDA operations.

Gromyko Says U.S. Proposals Are 'Lopsided'

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

MOSCOW — Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko said Tuesday that the "lopsided proposals" on medium-range nuclear weapons that were being put forward by the United States and its partners in the Western alliance "can only mean" that they wish to block agreement on the issue with the Soviet Union. Although Mr. Gromyko did not mention the oew proposals that Presideot Ronald Reagan announced Monday at the United Nations, his remarks appeared to be an obbque response to Mr. Reagan's initiative. Other reaction took the form of press commentaries, including one in Tass, the official oews agency, which described the proposals as "the same propaganda game and nothing more,"

Mr. Gromyko's remarks were made during a luncheon for Bohuslay Chnoupek, the foreign minister of Czechoslovakia.

Western diplomats said that Mr. Gromyko's avoidance of any direct reference to the oew U.S. proposals might indicate that the Kremlin had not yet had time to make a full assessment and did oot wish to reject them officially without further study. Alternatively, the diplomats said, it could mean that an official reply had been drafted, perhaps in the form of a government statement, and that Mr. Gromyko did not want to pre-empt it. In either case, the foreign minister's remarks suggested that the changes Mr. Reagan made in the previous U.S. offer were not sufficient to overcome Soviet objec-tions. As restated in Soviet press commentaries, these were that the U.S. positioo still excluded British and French nuclear systems from the Geneva talks and still envisaged the deployment of at least some new U.S. missiles.

As reported by Tass, Mr. Gromyko said that the Soviet Umon's position on medium-range nuclear weapons was that Europe should be cleared of nuclear weapons alto-gether, or, if the West refused this, that the two sides should agree on a new American emplacements.

"radical reduction" in such weap-ons. He said that the Krezulin's proposals at the Geneva talks were in line with these aims.

At this point, Mr. Gromyko gave what Western diplomats in Moscow took as a veiled response to Mr. Reagan's latest proposals.

"Why do the United States and its NATO allies keep turning their back on the principle of equality and equal security, putting forward lopsided proposals?" he said. "This can only mean that they intend to continue to block the oegotiations and to evade agreement." Mr. Gromyko went on to reiterate previous Soviet warnings of retaliation if the United States proceeds with plans to deploy the first of 572 new medium-range missiles in Western Europe this December.

"The Warsaw Pact member countries," he said, "have said their weighty word on that matter. If attempts are made at upsetting the balance in medium-range onclear systems existing in the European zone, they will be compelled to take countermeasures to protect their security and preserve military pari-

Previous statements by Soviet leaders have hinted that the countermeasures they envisage may include the deployment of new nuclear weapons in Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

Diplomats said that it was probably significant that come of the Soviet press commentaries gave any details of the president's proposals. They said that this might be a further indication that there were elements in the proposals that the Kremlin wanted to examine more carefully before offering any direct

Instead of outlining the Reagan proposals, the commentaries concentrated on the elements of the U.S. position that Mr. Reagan did not change, including the refusal to accept 162 British and French weapons in the Geneva count and the insistance that as long as any Soviet medium-range missiles are deployed, they must be matched by BELIING - When Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger arrived in China on Sunday for a five-day official visit, he was introduced to an army that was at one time considered the world's best light infantry but has been overtaken by progress.

China's People's Liberation Army, with more than 4.2 million men under arms, is largely obsolete, lacking sophisticated anti-tank and anti-aircraft missiles and electronic communications gear, among other modern necessities.

The army, which was born as a guerrilla band 56 years ago, remains mired in its traditional dual role of defending the country and "serving the people," as the old Maoist slogan put it. Its soldiers still routinely fix roads, plant trees, raise pigs and harvest rice. Yn Qiuli, the army's political commissar, said recently that the armed forces had contributed 100 million work days of public service over the last four years.

Yet an effort has now begun to transform the army into a more modern fighting machine. The PLA is no longer in the era of millet plus rifles," a commentary in the newspaper, People's Daily, said last May.

Mr. Weinberger was scheduled on Tuesday to visit the elize 3d Division of the Beijing garrison, and two days later he is to visit an aircraft factory in Xian and inspect a naval vessel in Shanghai. On Monday, the secretary of defense told the Chinese that the United States had approved the sale to China of 43 items of high technology, including some that can be applied to air defense and early warning systems.

Washington's offer, made two years ago, to consider Chinese requests for U.S. weapons remains open, although some Western military observers here doubt that the Chinese will pre-

The Chinese leadership is thought to be concerned that its purchase of American arms might give the Reagan administration a pretext to sell more weapons to the rival Nationalist regime on Taiwan. But China is also too poor to re-equip the world's largest army with foreign weapons. Commissar Yn was quoted by The Beijing Review in August as saying:

"We have never pinned our hopes for modernizing our military equipment on imports. China is a big country with a big army. We cannot afford to buy all the weapons we need. Even if we could afford it, it is hard to acquire really advanced weapons of important military

The Chinese seem interested in acquiring small quantities of foreign arms that could become prototypes for eventual weapons of Chinese manufacture. The chief of staff, Yang Dezhi, assured army delegates to the National People's Congress in June that "we will mainly rely on our own efforts to improve our weapons and equipment while introducing advanced techniques from other countries."

Statements by Chinese military leaders, articles in the official press and analyses by Beijingbased diplomats and military attachés indicate that the problem of modernization of the army extends beyond arms alone to basic tactics and leadership competence.

The army's arsenal consists of copies of Soviet weapons mostly predating 1960, when the Soviet Union stopped its military and economic assistance to China. Light weapons like the Chinese version of the Kalashnikov assault rifle are highly enough regarded to make China a major arms seller to developing countries. But heavier equipment is badly out of date. Korean War days. Its more modern Shenyang jet fighters, painstakingly updated from the MiG-19 and MiG-21, were described by one U.S. analyst as "the world's most advanced obsolete aircraft."

China has obtained some MiG-23s from Egypt to copy, and its version is now believed to be in production. But even this new plane is no match for supersonic fighters like the Soviet MiG-25 or the American F-16.

The Chinese T-59 tank is likewise copied from the old Soviet T-55. A newer Chinese model, the T-69, has a gun stabilizer for highspeed firing, infrared searchlights and a laser range finder, but it remains inferior to the T-72 that speacheads Soviet armored units. The Chinese Army still basically moves on foot. Of the 200 or more divisions it is estimated to have, only 11 are armored and three are airborne. The Chinese have mechanized three to five infantry divisions, although it is unclear whether all their battalions are included. A military attaché from a North Atlantic Treaty Organization country who has watched Chinese ground tactics said, "It is just like World War I with treaches." The Chinese Army is now trying to transform its old strategy of static defense, which is vulnerable to armored and airborne assault, into what its daily newspaper has called an "active defense." As some Chinese officers describe it this means combining fixed defensive positions with mobile forces for counterstrikes and guerrillas for harassment behind enemy lines. Wn Xinquan, head of Beijing's Institute of International Strategic Studies, told visiting American members of Congress in August that China was

Until the past few days, newspa-pers and television have presented little information that differs from the government's version of the assassination, which is that Mr. Aquino was shot Aug. 21 by a hired guiman who was then killed by security guards.

El Espino, 156 miles (243 kilometers) north of Managua, the capital, is on the Pan American Highway and is the principal crossing point on the border between Honduras and Nicaragua. Honduran-based Nicaraguan

In Managua, the Foreign Ministry said the rebels were supported by Honduran Army artillery, calling it "an act of aggression." The attack on El Espino is part of a new 2,000-rebel offensive to overthrow Nicaragua's leftier Sendinist conserument. Voters in Kenya Defeat

Salvadoran Jets Said to Kill Civilians

SAN SALVADOR (UPI) - Salvadoran military jets dropped 500pound (226-kilogram) bombs on a guerrills controlled town, killing at least 18 civilians and wounding others, without dislodging the rebels, vitnesses said Tuesday.

The assault Sunday on Tenancingo, 17 miles (28 kilometers) northeast of San Salvador, was apparently aimed at dislodging the guerrillas from Mr. Njonjo, once one of the three most powerful politicians in Kenya along with Mr. Moi and Vice President Mwai Kibaki, was the town, which lies on a strategic corridor used to supply a major leftist rebel stronghold. Doctors in Cojutepeque, about five miles south of Tenancingo, said they treated 31 civilians wounded in the fighting, including seven who sustained "fractures by explosions" in the bombing. Journalists who reached Tenancingo said they saw the bodies of 10 soldiers and 42 who had suffered wounds that appeared to be from the bumbing. The wounded soldiers were held prisoner by guernilas in a foreign power to overthrow Mr. Moi. Despite the allegations, no criminal charges have been brought church.

Walesa Alleged to Have $1 Million

WARSAW (UPI) - Polish television charged Tuesday that Lech that he wanted to stash away in the Vatican bank with the help of the pope. Mr. Walesa denied the allegation.

A special 30-minute documentary entitled "Money," shown during prime time, played a tape recording said to be of a conversation between Mr. Walesa and his brother Stanislaw on Sept. 20, 1982, when Mr. Walesa was under arrest. The scratchy recording purported to show that Mr. Walesa spoke of putting $1 million given him by foreign well-wishers in prizes and gifts into the Vatican bank.

According to the recording, Mr. Walesa told his brother: "If you go to the pope, I'll say that he is to receive you and arrange it for you." Mr. Walesa said from his Gdansk apartment after the program: "My brother Stamslaw has made a statement that there was no such recording. I am not getting involved in polemics about it."

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (Reuters) — Tension mounted in Pakistan's

Sind province Tuesday as four people died, a bomb exploded and police rounded up opposition leaders before controversial local elections on Thursday, opposition sources said. The sources said three people died and 13 were injured when a crowd of opposition supporters exchanged gunfire with police trying to inspect a polling station at Khanpur in northern Sind. Police confirmed that a policeman died in the clash.

Another policeman was killed and two were wounded in an ambush near Jamshoro, they added.

The opposition has called for a boycott of the polls because political parties are banned from contesting them. The Movement for the Restora-tion of Democracy, which launched a civil disobedience drive against President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq on Aug. 14, said the military government had rounded up more than 350 people in central Sind to keep them from upsetting the elections.

Search for KAL Recorders Narrows In Sea of Japan, U.S. Navy Reports

WASHINGTON - U.S. Navy officials said Tuesday that the search for two black boxes containing in-flight data recorders of the downed South Korean jetliner had been narrowed to a 15-square-mile (42-square-kilometer) area about 20 miles (32 kilometers) west-northvest of the island of Moneron in the Sea of Japan.

More than a week ago, the search area had been 3,000 square miles. Both U.S. and Soviet vessels have been combing a wide area near Sakhalin Island to find the wreckage and the recorders, which may contain clues to why Korean Air Lines Flight 7 strayed hundreds of miles into Soviet airspace before being shot down by Soviet jet

Both navy and State Department officials said, however, that the jet wreckage containing the recorders still had not been found. They denied recurring reports in the Japanese press that U.S. Navy vessels searching for the debris had located the black boxes.

Navy officials also said that a number of officials of the International Civil Aviation Organization had arrived in the region and were taken abourd U.S. Navy search vessels as impartial observers to witness any recovery operations that might take place. The idea is to have those officials on the scene so that if the black boxes are recovered, there will be oo charges that they were tampered with.

In Lebanon, a Pause

President Reagan's speech on peace at the United Nations was happily complemented by his audience's awareness that he had just made a contribution to bringing about a cease-fire in Lebanon. It was one of those all too infrequent occasions in international politics when a natioo's actions give a boost to its words.

It is, of course, far too early to celebrate success in Lebanon; and it needs also to be remembered that the terrible troubles Mr. Reagan and others are addressing there were created and exacerbated by the defaults and errors of many countries - including the United States. The violence has been suspended for an uncertain time during which the Lebanese have another chance to deal with problems whose solutions have eluded them for years. Ton many times before, the Lebauese and their friends have pronounced "enough" to the killing, only to be pitched back into new bloodletting.

For the moment, however, the American contribution can he commended. Mr. Reagan had little warm company and much bot criticism in undertaking to use the force necessary to support his diplomacy. He had to move against a wily and vengeful Syrian regime stiffened by Soviet arms and men.

While bolstering an infirm Lebanese gov-ernment, moreover, he had to bring it to accept a commitment to an exceedingly painful exercise in power sharing. Just to traverse this mine field with Sandi Arabia, the United States's indispensable partner in the Middle East, was an achievement.

The resulting cease-fire is much more than a cease-fire. It is a road map of sorts to a "new Lebanon" - a Lebanon unoccupied by foreign armies and at peace with itself. There can be no doubt that no strictly military agreement, no agreement not setting up a new pobtical process, could have won Lebanon even a temporary reprieve. But it is not ton early to begin asking, quietly, just how far the United States intends to accompany Lebanon down what promises at best to be a very long and tortuous road. Specifically, what is the tenure and the role of the Marines? What possibilities now exist for a handover to the United Nations? Mr. Reagan cannot put off such difficult questions for long. ·

The Poorest Will Suffer

Seven is not a lucky number for the International Development Association, the World Bank's lending agency for the poorest and most populous nations. For the seventh time since its creation in 1960 (by the United States), IDA is asking richer nations to replenish its funds for a three-year cycle. But alone among the major donors, the United States proposes an absolute reduction, pleading lack of congressional support.

It is a limo excuse for a dismaying decision. When it comes to deploying missiles — or imposing trade sanctions — President Reagan asks his allies to think globally and follow his lead. But when it comes to urgent help for IDA, which Europeans favor, his administration ducks behind the frowns of Congress.

If Mr. Reagan means what his Treasury says, the U.S. contribution to IDA will be cut by at least a fourth, to $750 million a year. Since that sets the dues for other nations, the seventh replenishment from 33 donors would total about $9 billion. This contrasts with the $12 billion pledged for IDA-6 (in which the U.S. commitment was reduced, by stretching from three to four years) and with the $16 billion urged for IDA-7 by the World Bank. First and foremost among the victims of any cut would be the world's poorest nations, which vitally depend on IDA's zero-interest, 50-year loans. But these are not the only IDA clients. As a new World Bank member, China is now eligible for loans, and India's growth hinges crucially on a continued flow of IDA money for at least three years.

IDA loans are generous, but not without benefit to the contributors. They generate trade and enhance political and financial stability. No sensible American purpose would be served by impelling India, for lack of IDA help, to turn to already overstretched private capital markets. Nor does it make sense to say that Americans cannot afford more than $750 million a year when the Defense Department spends five times more in a week.

Treasury's assessment of Congress is hardly infallible. In any case, the administration will never get an adequate IDA pledge without asking for it. That is the course urged on Mr. Reagan by his European allies, by his own State Department and by the man he approved as head of the World Bank, A.W. Clausen. Reconsidering this paltry contribution would make the president a bigger man, and the world a better place.

A Cup for Australia

Sometimes the race really is to the swift, and it is a sight to lift the heart. The Australians clearly had a faster boat, and they handled it brilliantly. The Americans struggled valiantly to overcome the handicap of a slower boat. But in the most extraordinarily close-run series in this very long competition, the challenger finally surged ahead to win the cup.

There has been a little muttering on the American side that the Australians infringed the obscure and fine-spun rule about national origin by having their revolotionary new keel tested in the Netherlands. That is malarkey. Australia is oot a populous country, and if ga work was dobe in mou that will oot change any sensible person's view of the race by a millimeter. The boat was Australian, and the Australians earned their that looks much like the one oo Australia II. victory the hard way.

There is something about a 132-year monopoly of a tropby that invites a cheer regardless of your nationality - for the chalnger. The Americans had got a bit too much in the habit of winning, and that is never good for Americans. For the same country to successfully defend a cup 25 times — as the United States has since winning it in 1851 also invites unflattering thoughts about the fairness of the competition. Americans are widely acknowledged to be fair, decent, kind, generous and lovable - but 25 wins in a row is not good for anybody's national character.

This setback, the Australians should be Americans will be back after that cup next time. And their boat will probably have a keel

Other Opinion

Weinberger in Beijing

Two years of strain in Chinese-American relations, at times almost reaching a breaking point, have oow been relieved. The current visit of the defense secretary, Caspar Weinberger, is expected to hold promise such as only the U.S. visit by Deng Xiaoping in February 1979 could match. While it is still too early to expect that the American president would visit Beijing, perhaps early next year, this idea is oot excluded. His presence in Beijing would be another milestone in U.S.-Chinese relations. - South China Morning Post (Hong Kong).

The Smell of Mothballs

The latest addition to the U.S. fleet in the Mediterranean is the battleship New Jersey, a veteran of three wars. The New Jersey's keel was laid in 1940; it was commissioned in '43. It fought in World War II, then was mothballed. It was recommissioned in '50 and served two combat tours in Korea, then was mothballed again. It was recommissioned in 1967, served a 120-day combat tour in Vietnam, then was mothballed again. Now it is off Lebanon.

And it is just the first of four old ships scheduled to join the fleet. This is an embarrassment to many Navy men, who believe battleships are dinosaurs. But three groups love the old battleships: Nostalgic sailors.

2. Shipyard owners. The New Jersey, which cost $100 million oew, cost $326 million to recommission. The Wisconsin, a sister ship of the New Jersey, will cost $408 million to re-commission. The Iowa and the Missouri, also sisters, will cost $415 million and $470 million. respectively.

3. The Marines. When they're hunkered down in bunkers, keeping the peace, they love to hear the whoosh of 16-inch shells zooming toward their attackers.

P.S. For what it's worth, no commander in chief who ordered the New Jersey out of mothballs has ever been renominated

Herald Tribune Reagan Should Ignore Marcos's Bluster, Cancel Visit

WASHINGTON — Few foreign policy problems are more frustrating than the ability of small countries to manipulate the big powers that seek their sympathy. President Dwight Eisenhower's secretary of state, John Foster Dulles, once referred to the phenomenon as "the tyranny of the weak." The phenomenon has been visible in U.S. relations with such client states as Israel and Taiwan, which for one reason or another have been able to get the United States to dance to their tune. It is most dramatic at the moment in the maneuvers of President Ferdinand Marcos. President Reagan believes that he must re-main on good terms with Mr. Marcos for the sake of the U.S. air and naval bases in the Philippines. As a result, Mr. Marcos is convinced that he can exercise unlimited leverage over the United States.

Mr. Marcos warned the other day that he might not renew the base agreement if Mr. Reagan canceled his plans to visit the Philippines during a tour of Asia in November. Some consideration had been given to an alteration of Mr. Reagan's itinerary because of the explosive situation in the Philippines. White House aides finally affirmed that the travel plans would not be changed.

President Marcos's blackmail had worked. Hostility to the Marcos regime, which has been mounting steadily since he declared mar-tial law a decade ago, has risen sharply since Aug. 21, when Benigno Aquino Jr. was assassinated at the Manila airport as he returned home from the United States to mobilize the opposition. The worst violence in nearly two decades broke out Sept. 21, when demonstrators swarmed through Manila to protest Mr. Marcos's rule; at least 10 persons died.

Mr. Marcos desperately needs the Reagan visit. He knows that the Philippines, a U.S. dependency for 50 years, is profoundly pro-American. He reckons that Mr. Reagan's presence in Manila will symbolize America's stamp of approval for his oligarchy.

But it is precisely the depth of pro-American sentiment in the Philippines that ought to prompt Mr. Reagan to skip his stop there. By seeming to endorse Mr. Marcos even indirectly. he runs the risk of alienating a large segment of the Philippine population that has traditionally looked toward the United States to uphold democracy in the country.

years, I can testify to the extent of pro-American feeling there. But it stems largely from the fact that the United States, in contrast to other colonial powers, introduced widespread education and republican institutions. No sooner was the country conquered, just before the turn of the century, than a timetable for independence

Oddly, many Filipinos were so attached to America that they would have preferred being part of the United States to independence. What attracted them were American values, such as freedom and justice, which Mr. Marcos has abridged.

It is true that Mr. Marcos might become more difficult on the issue of the U.S. bases should Mr. Reagan decide to eliminate the Philippines from his schedule. But there are limits to the Marcos threat.

The American installations serve the United States, but it is in the interest of the Philippines to preserve them. They provide a security umbrella for the Philippines, which as a consequence does not require a big defense budget.

Mr. Marcos can huff and puff all he wants, but his alternatives are limited. He cannot, for example, make a deal with the Soviet Union. He is further strapped by the likelihood that a confrontation with the United States would aggravate his precarious position with his own people, for whom the American connection is fundamental. To be anti-American in the Philippines may be popular among leftist student factions, but it is apostasy in the barries, the country's villages. Hundreds of thousands of lipinos, veterans of service in the U.S. anned forces, live on American pensions. Mr. Reagan's staff says he will cancel his visit to the Philippines only if solid evidence can be produced to link Mr. Marcos to the Aquino murder. The prospects of producing such proof are remote, since the committee of inquiry in the affair consists of Marcos appointees.

The Reagan administration should contend that it is up to Mr. Marcos to demonstrate that. he was not implicated in Mr. Aquino's assassination. Mr. Aquino was flanked by three security guards when he was killed.

More importantly, though, Mr. Reagan can make it clear by skirting the Philippines that the United States represents liberty—especially in a land whose people largely cherish the legacy of their American tutelage.

Seeking a Broader Answer To the Cambodia Question

Cambodia for the fifth year in a row.

Again, it will debate whether to seat the deposed government of Pol Pot, which ruled from 1975 to 1979, or that of Heng Samrin, who was installed by the Vietnamese in 1979. But it is time to re-examine the problem, to search for a broader solution that would end the fighting between the Vietnamese occupiers and the Cambodian resistance forces.

In fact, there is a simple solution: Ask both sides to drop all fighters and officials who belonged to the Khmer Rouge under the government of Pol Pot.

This formula would have farreaching implications, because the Khmer Rouge remain the key Cam-

The two sides have hardened considerably in the last two years. Pol Pot, a communist, has formed a coali-tion of sorts with Prince Norodom Sihanouk, a noncommunist wbo ruled from the mid-1940s until 1970, and with Son Sann, the prince's former prime minister. On the other side, the Heng Samrin government joined a Vietnamese-dominated alliance cemented this year at the first Indochina summit meeting of Victnam, Laos and Cambodia. Meanwhile, this year, as before, thousands of Cambodians and Vietnamese died also the core of the resistance army.

in the annual dry season offensive. There is one point of wide agreement — namely, that the Khmer Rouge regime under Pol Pot was so murderous it could be considered genocidal. (The Heng Samrin regime. in an effort to indict Pol Pot and give itself greater legitimacy, said in a re-port that 2.7 million Cambodians died under his regime. Ontside estimates have ranged from 1 million to 3 million.) This is where negotiations should begin - and all steps should be taken to prevent the responsible Khmer Rouge from threatening the people again. So all Khmer Rouge figures should be removed from positions of political and military power on both sides. The resistance coalition would lose much of its army: Pol Pot and most of his 30,000 soldiers would have to go, leaving the resistance with only about 10,000 noncommunist soldiers, ch for 150 000 V esc. But Heng Samrin would also lose the core of his government --- and the Victnamese Army would be left pro-tecting a more nationalistic regime.

Most of the issues that divide the two sides would also disappear. If Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge army were dismantled, the Vietnamese would no longer have to fear that China might use Cambodia as a base to threaten Victuam's security. The Cambodian people would no longer have to fear Pol Pot's army. And the Vietnamese would soon feel secure enough to begin withdrawing their forces.

Who would run the country? There are plenty of educated Cambodians outside the Khmer Rouge who could take over - people now working for Heng Samrin and for the noncommunists in the resistance. Thousands of Cambodians now overseas would also be allowed to come home.

What about outside, interested countries? The Chinese have to agree, for only they can take care of the Khmer Rouge, presumably by offer-ing the top figures asylum. But China could accept this solution because it is one that resembles Beijing's latest call for a neutral Cambodia.

The Vietnamese would agree if they were promised significant economic aid - and if Vietnam went along, the Soviet Union would too. The United States could help by lifting the embargo against Haro, normalizing relations and promising to support international aid. Moreover, the Vietnamese would not have to admit wrongdoing. And they should be assured that the formula would allow Marxists in Heng Samrin's regime — including his prime minister and defense minister — to join a new government. The Viet-namese could also maintain a special economic and cultural relationship with Cambodia.

Those Dratted Interest Rates: Some Worrying Trends if any, consideration for inflationary

WASHINGTON — When Trea-sury Secretary Donald T. Regan blames banks for high interest rates. he shows that he does not understand interest rates, banks - or both.

There are roughly 14,000 banks in the United States, more than 4,000 savings associations and about 12,000 credit unions. Borrowers who think one bank's rates are too high can go elsewhere. So can depositors who think savings rates are too low. The only charitable explanation for Mr. Regan's recent commentary is frustration. Interest rates have confounded government officials, economists, bankers, business executives and consumers since 1980. They rose higher than expected, stayed there longer and now, another puzzle, have not prevented a strong recovery. Few economic issues raise so much anxiety or uncertainty. By themselves, interest rates do not matter. But they do matter if they squelch recovery or crush debt-laden developing countries. Are either of these likely? No one knows.

And recovery, ont interest rates, will mainly determine the fate of developing countries and the stability of the global banking system. The economist William R. Cline estimates that 1-percent economic growth among industrialized countries improves debtor nations' balance of Dayments seven times as much as a one-point decline in interest rates. The reason: rising exports.

None of this means interest rates are not high. The convention today is to describe rates in "real" terms, adjusted for inflation. Home mortgages n the early 1960s averaged less than 6 percent when inflation ran 1 to 2 percent; the real rate appeared to be 4 to 5 percent inflation. Comparable mortgages now command 13 percent or more; against 5-percent inflation, the real rate seems to be 8 percent. Other comparisons are more dramatie. Top-quality corporate bonds tched less than 4.5 percent in the early 1960s. Their rates oow exceed bracket, the deductibility of interest 12 percent. Banks' prime rates rethrough 1964. Now they are 11 percent. Against inflation, today's rates are all higher. Why? Take your pick:

• Monetary policy. The Federal Reserve, it is argued, squeezed the money supply too hard for too long. Its stringent anti-inflation policy, adopted in October 1979, coincided closely with the sharp rise in interest rates. The trouble with this explanation is that the relaxation of moneysupply growth last summer brought down "nominal" interest rates (unadjusted), but not real rates.

 Deficits. Large deficits have increased demand for credit, boosting interest rates. Maybe. A problem with this theory is that total growth in credit (government plus business and consumer borrowing) as a proportion of gross national product was much less last year than in 1978. But real rates remained high.

• Deregulation. Uotil recently, legal interest-rate ceilings existed on many savings deposits, consumer loans, and state and local government borrowings. Once competing interest rates rose beyond the cellings, the economy slowed. People withdrew from savings accounts, dampening mortgage lending. Now the disappearance of these ceilings, it is argued, means that rates must rise further before borrowing slows. Fine, But why, then, did rates stay high after the economy collapsed?

The list of theories, and there are more, attests to the confusion. The only way to make sense of it may be to concede something to everyone and resort to common sense. The common sense is that interest rates may not be as high as they seem, because they need to be adjusted for taxes. Consider this: means that a 13-percent mortgage mained at 4.5 percent from 1961 has an aftertax cost of 8.45 percent. If inflation averages 5 percent during the mortgage, that implies a real intcrest rate of 3.45 percent. At 7-percent inflation, the real rate drops to 1.45 percent. Likewise, a 7-percent inflation would mean that the real, aftertax cost of a 12-percent bond would be negative for firms at the top corporate tax rate of 46 percent.

For a taxpayer in the 35-percent

These examples underline the guesswork in estimating real interest rates for long-term bonds and mortgages. No one knows people's expectations of future inflation, and their interaction with tax laws and actual interest rates is a relatively new phenomenon. Until the 1970s, people did not regard inflation as permanent. Low interest rates (and, therefore, low deductibility) made tax consequences secondary.

Borrowers seem to have grasped the new resitties before government. Federal Reserve policy in the 1970s aimed at low interest rates with little, expectations or tax consequences. Borrowers swarmed for cheap credit. This abetted global inflation, because U.S. interest rates dominate world credit markets. Now govern-ment may be catching up. The Fed seems determined to prevent this cycle from recurring. Tax considerations and long-term expectations seem to have insinuated themselves quietly into policy.

If so, today's relatively high real rates may signal a better balance between growth and inflation. Slight interest rate run-ups may not be fatal. The implications are extensive. High tax rates (but not the overall tax burden) may compel high interest rates to avoid runaway inflation. But this raises the dollar's exchange value and hurts exports. Likewise, a twotiered credit system may be emerging. Individuals and firms in low tax brackets may face much higher interest rates, which they cannot afford. This suggests a familiar problem: a collision between sensible economic policy and fair social policy. National Journal

ARTS/LEISURE BEING KNOWN AS A NUMBER CAN BE A VERY PERSONAL THING

Look, for example, at the individual registration number on the back label of your bottle of Beefeater Gin. If it were JF 1222146, it would tell you that your Beefeater was distilled Thursday, January 7, 1982, under the supervision of Thomas Bowman, Master Stillman, and that the distillation was approved personally by Mr. Norman Burrough, a direct descendant of our founder, before it was allowed to leave the distillery.

Does it help to know all this? Yes That number is a vital part of Beefeater's quality control. Because the number is Mr. Bowman's personal signature. And Mr. Burrough's as well.

And any artist is at his best when he has to sign his work.

says the son early in the play, and though that sentiment seems to me utterly unobjectionable, it is not in fact what the play is about. Rather, its theme lies in the father's line about London suburbs "lasting a thousand years." That Hitlerian promise is made in no sense of terror or defeat. Kureishi clearly believes the suburbs are at the heart of what is good about England, and that they will survive no matter what temporary population changes they endure. No English playwright has written a comparable hymn to Beckenham, Bromley and Croydon since Noel Coward was accused of patronizing his own folk in "This Happy Breed" all of 40 years ago. # Despite a Strong Commitment to NATO,

Europeans Balk at Higher Arms Budget

By William Drozdiak

BRUSSELS — Across Western Europe, de-lease minded governments that took power determined to blunt the Soviet threat are finding that they cannot pay the higher bills for military spending urged by the Reagan administration.

Belgium's center-right government has in-formed allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Orga-nization that it cannot afford its share of the modern Patriot anti-aircraft system, a default that would leave a gaping hole in the alliance's integrated air defense network.

Britain has just cut $360 million from its military budget and is seeking ways to curtail its tasks within NATO. The British Navy has spurned appeals to play an expanded role in the Mediterraneau because its fleet is overburdened by the defense of the Falkland Islands. ...

The West German Army is anticipating an acute manpower shortage caused by a falling birth rate and a sharp increase in conscientious objectors. Last year, 60,000 West Germans, or one out of every six youths eligible for the draft, refused to serve in the armed forces because of anti-war convictions.

Last autumn, the Danish parliament voted to cancel its country's share of NATO's infrastructure costs for deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe at the end of the year. The conservative minority government opposed the parliament's action. Denmark also has restricted the defense budget to a 0.5 percent increase this year. That is far short of the 3 percent annual increase, after inflation, that NATO members prescribed as a common goal. for military spending in 1977.

Indeed, Europe's prolonged recession has compelled most governments to abandon the 3 percent mark as an impossible goal. Among NATO members, only Norway and the United States will increase defense spending by more than 3 percent this year. .

"From our standpoint, the political situation within the alliance is the best it has been for more than a decade," explained a NATO policy planner. "But all of these governments are finding it extremely difficult to come up with the money that the military wants."

Recession Is Eroding Defenses

Recent elections have swept conservative governments to power in London, Bonn, The Hague and Brussels, creating what Washington perceived as a more sympathetic political coalition to invigorate Western Europe's defenses after what were deemed as years of neglect.

Even the Socialist-led government in France, a country that pulled out of NATO's military command in 1966, unveiled plans for major improvements in its independent nuclear deterrent system upon taking office two years ago.

Yet at a time when West Europeans are absorbed by the controversial deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise nuclear missiles later this year if arms talks fail, a more fundamental crisis is emerging from the grim recognition that an era of declining prosperity is starting to erode.

U.S. Seeks More Allied Support

When NATO was created in 1949, the United States reigned as the world's dominant economic and military power, and its protection was coveted by West Europeans still struggling to rebuild from the ruins of war.

Today, at least six European nations have higher per capita incomes than the United States, and the Reagan administration, backed by Congress and public opinion polls, has urged the Europeans to spend more for their own

The U.S. strategy to defend the Gulf oil fields will require substantial allied help in providing transit facilities and picking up the defense slack on the Central European front if U.S. troops were suddenly dispatched to Middle East trou-

But West European governments have balked repeatedly at the concept of extending NATO's defense perimeter. Their reticence has exasperated U.S. defense planners who believe that the Europeans are also dependent on Gulf oil and should not expect the United States to bear all the costs of protecting their energy supply chan-

Assessing the Enemy Threat

The simmering conflicts over budgets and regional responsibilities are intensifying just when the alliance is confronting the threat of protests this fall against the stationing of new medium-range nuclear missiles.

The danger, as seen from NATO headquarters, is that demonstrations could assume anti-American overtones, Attacks on U.S. military outposts could once again inflame congressional demands to pull out some or all of the 350,000 U.S. troops based in Western Europe.

Beyond those immediate concerns, European reluctance or inability to spend more money on defense reflects to some extent differing assessments among the allies of the military threat posed by Warsaw Pact forces.

There is perhaps greater shared disdain toward the Soviet government between Washington and West European capitals than at any time in recent memory.

Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan, the crackdown in Poland and the shooting down of the South Korean airliner with 269 people aboard have reinforced suspicious on both sides of the Atlantic about the Soviet military estab-

West German planner at NATO headquarters.

"For some countries, real increases in defense spending will be nearly impossible for the next stead, the Western alliance has focused its efforts on deploying an array of deterrent forces capable of dissuading any Soviet strategist from thinking an invasion could be successful. According to NATO estimates, for example, the Warsaw Pact possesses 42,500 tanks compared with 13,000 for the alliance. Yet, NATO planners and military officers at the Supreme Allied Headquarters near Mons in southwestern Belgium concede that the West still holds the edge because the American-made M-1 and West German Leopard-2 tanks are superior to the latest Soviet models, the T-72 and T-80.

Moreover, they said that tank personnel in the West are better trained and NATO's antitank defenses are more effective than rival sys-

Communications problems and equipment breakdowns experienced by Soviet forces enter-ing Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan have convinced some defense planners at NATO that allied defenses would hold up much better than expected in the event of war.

Surprise Attack on NATO Unlikely

The notion of a surprise attack from a "standing start" has been discredited in NATO intelligence circles because the alliance would have weeks of warning that aggressive actions were under way in the East.

"We would detect very quickly movements that predate an attack by about three weeks," explained a NATO defense planner. "Troops would have their leave canceled, submarines would be departing bases en masse, any number of things we would see well before D-Day ar-

Soviet military strategy dictates that Warsaw Pact forces should probe for weak links in Western defenses and then pour waves of troops followed by fresh reinforcements through the

A major weakness of the Soviet military structure, however, is its rigid and centralized com-mand system that offers little initiative or flexibility to officers in the field.

NATO planners say this strict chain of command, as well as ponderous supply channels, provide oumerous "choke points" where the West could disrupt an advance from the East. The most glaring shortcoming, however, re-mains the unreliability of East European forces in any offensive thrust conducted by the Soviet Umon, NATO officials admit it is difficult to believe armies in Poland and Hungary would "dutifully march in lockstop" with the Russians.

Quick Use of Nuclear Weapons

But U.S. General Bernard W. Rogers, NA-TO's supreme military commander, is far more impressed with Warsaw Pact capabilities and states that if an invasion occurred, he would be compelled to ask his political overseers for authority to use nuclear weapons "fairly quickly" to avoid being overrun.

"We have mortgaged our defense to the nu-clear response," he said. "The plain fact is that if conventional war comes, we will simply be unable to sustain our forces for long with manpower, ammunition and war reserve stocks."

Allies Review Reliance on Nuclear Arms

BRUSSELS — "We want no Euroshima."
The phrase has become a popular slogan for the European peace movement that is mobilizing an autumn campaign of rallies, sit-ins and blockades to halt the deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise nuclear missiles planned to begin in December unless a surprise accord is reached in the Geneva arms talks.

While the peace crusaders may not block the stationing of these new middle-range missiles, they already have succeeded in stirring up so much public alarm about excessive relia nuclear deterrence that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is exploring other strategies. The issues of how high to raise the threshold against using nuclear weapons to stop an attack by the Warsaw Pact is developing into the most ensitive military debate of the decade for General Bernard W. Rogers of the United states, NATO's supreme military commander, has said West European forces could not last much more than seven to 10 days against a fullscale assault from the East. Faced with the prospect of a complete rout, he would be forced to ask permission to use nuclear weapons in the early stages of battle, he said.

General Rogers said that if West European overnments wanted to relieve public anxieties about NATO's need to use nuclear weapons quickly in a major conflict, they would have to spend more money on modern conventional weapons that can strike deep behind East bloc lines to disrupt supply and communications at least, the rationale for nuclear missiles. A British military planner at NATO criticized the strategy as "too modest and too ambitious." It does not eliminate the central role played by nuclear weapons in Western defense, he said, and at the same time it requires NATO govern-ments to meet a spending goal beyond the current 3 percent goal that most of them have failed to achieve.

Lebanese Massacres: Truth Is Elusive

Charges by Druze, Christians Are Commonplace, but Evidence Is Scarce

By E.J. Dionne

New York Times Service. BEIRUT — Many innocent lives have been lost in the brutal fighting in the mountains around Beirut. Some of those lives - no one knows how many - may have been lost in massacres by Christian and Druze militiamen.

In a story typical of many being told here, a woman named Mary Njeim said that she saw her daughter shot to death in a street in Masser cl Chuf by Druze militiamen.

Mrs. Njeim, a 55-year-old widow, said mili-tiamen entered the home of Najib and Zazhah Njeim, an elderly Christian couple who were distantly related to her, and shot them and their grandson. A second grandson, she said, ran to the house of a local priest, the Rev. Antoine Aboud, where Mrs. Njeim and her 20-year-old daughter, Leila, were fixing lunch. Mr. Aboud was slain when he went outside to see what the commotion was, Mrs. Njeim said. She said the grandson was shot as well and Leila was killed as she tried to escape down the street.

Publish Essay Mrs. Njeim ran to a friend's house and hid on a balcony, she said. Then she heard gunfire and explosions as about 15 gunmen moved from house to house.

Mrs. Njeim escaped behind Israeli lines and told her story recently at a news conference in Siden. What is especially chilling about her description is that such reports became commonplace after fierce fighting between Druze and Christian militiamen began in Lebanon on Sept. 4. And since it is usually impossible to prove or disprove the charges by first-hand observation, the loss of innocent lives has become a propaganda tool as well as a reason for

Denials on Both Sides

The Druze Progressive Socialist Party's militia denies that it has massacred any Christians, but it says that the militia of the Christian Phalangist Party has massacred Druze in at least three villages.

The Phalangists deny any guilt but say that at least 211 Christians have died at the hands of Druze or Palestinian fighters this month. They say that 141 other Christians have disappeared. in the cacaphony of press conferences, the horror of what may be happening in the mountains often gets lost. The word massacre itself has been devalued: The two sides speak of "propaganda massacres," those invented by the other side, and "real massacres," those they say have been carried ont against their own people. Some partisans on both sides acknowledge privately that when the truth is known about the clean hands. "The attitude on both sides often is that if been inevitable, given the kind of blood feud that is behind some of the fighting in Lebanon.

Some here argue that the massacre reports will ultimately prove exaggerated and that the personal friendships that exist between many Christians and Druze in the mountains served to contain the violence. Most Druze insist that they are hostile to the Phalangist militia, but not to Christians. The Christians say they have no personal animus against the Druze.

Still, history lends a certain credibility to massacre stones here.

The Christians who live in the Chuf mountains still speak of the 1860 massacre, in which, some historians estimate, as many 2s 2,000 Christians died at the bands of the Druze.

The Christians also point to a 1977 massacre of Christians by Druze after the killing of the Druze Progressive Socialist Party's leader, Ka-mal Jumblat. The killings, of perhaps 100 Chris-tians, occurred despite the fact that the evidence pointed to Syrians as Mr. Jumblat's killers.

Draze charges against the Christian militia, meanwhile, are believed by many non-Chris-tians and by some Christians as well since the killing of 300 to 450 Palestinians at the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps near here a year ago this month. That massacre is believed to have been done by Phalangist militiamen.

Phalangist Ruse Charged

The Christian militia has gone to particular lengths recently to report and document massacres. This may, in part, result from the fact that the Phalangist militia still bristles over reports of the Sabra and Chatila massacres, which it continues to insist, despite much evidence to the contrary, was a military action. But it is also true that the Phalangists largely lost the mountain

Some Druze charge that the Phalangists are using massacre reports to cover their defeat. These Phalangists are smart," said one Druze. They reduce their casualty figures and increase their massacre figures at the same time by listing their dead fighters as massacre victims."

"You tell me if a 100-year-old man would made a good fighter," said an angry Christian militia spokesman when asked about the Druze comment. "You tell me if children would make good fighters." The fact that independent corroboration of the charges is difficult makes the current round of accusations very different from those against the Christian militia in the case of Sabra and Those massacres were carried out in the middle of Beirut, where hundreds of journalists massacres, neither side is likely to emerge with Jumblat Christians, while other Druze said that no massacre had taken place at all.

In the recent battles, the massacres were not reported in one large place, but in towns and villages throughout the mountains. A war was on, and many of the villages were inaccessible, or at least quite difficult to reach. The winning side in any given village was most often the accused party, and so by the time outside observers were allowed to reach a site, witnesses had fled and the evidence of slaughter could be

Agencies Maintain Independence

Finally, independent agencies have been reluctant to make their own assessments of what happened, partly because they are too busy trying to care for the living.

"Many people have asked us to confirm this one, or go there," said Laure Speziali of the International Red Cross mission here, "but that's not our job."

Such evidence as is available suggests that some gruesome events have certainly taken

Western diplomats with first-hand knowledge say that at Kfar Matta, where Christians are alleged to have slaughtered Druze, 20 bodies, of all ages and both sexes, were found in the street.

Some reportedly had their throats slit.

The Phalangists early this month prereporters with Druze witnesses from Kfar Matta who denied that a massacre had taken place. But the witnesses - refugees from Kfar Matta were in the care of the Christian militia at the time. They were also interviewed in the presense of Phalangist militiamen and appeared not to have been at the site when the massacre is alleged to have taken place.

A Typically Complex Case

The case of Bhamdoun, where Christians are illeged to have been massacred, has produced a tangled set of reports that illustrate how complex the task of getting at the truth will be. Reports reaching Western diplomats say the Christians killed in Bhamdown were sympathizers of the main Druze group, the Progressive Socialist Party led by Walid Jumblat. According to these reports, the Christians stayed behind believing that they would be welcomed, only to be killed by Druze militiamen hostile to Mr.

Jumbiat's party.

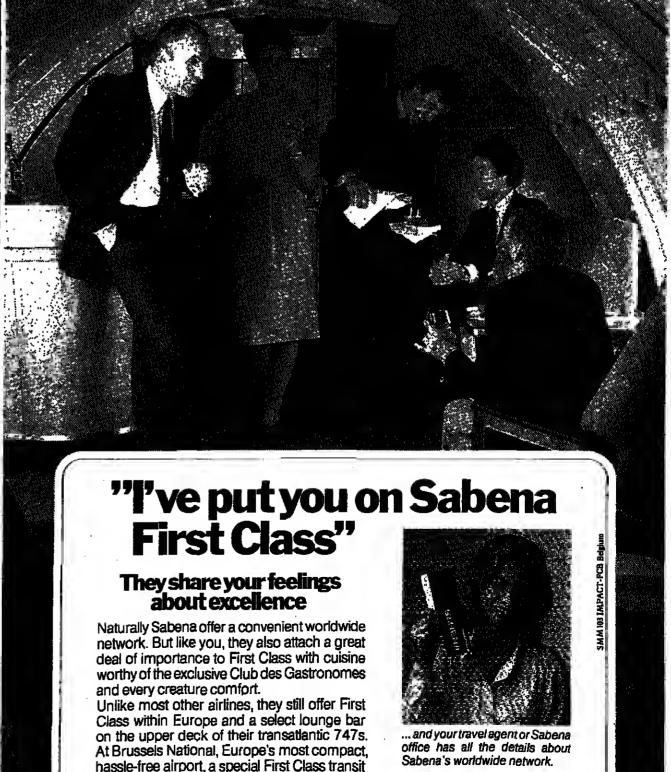

An official of the Phalangist militia said he believed that the killings were in fact carried out by Mr. Jumblat's men, but he added that the militia had not even included Bhamdonn on its list of massacres because it lacked sufficient To complicate matters further, some reports

Edwardes Mum About Appointment To Take Over From Laidlaw at ICL Off Sharply

The news that Sir Michael Ed-wardes, executive chairman of the British automaker BL from 1977 through 1982, is to be the next chairman of ICL, Britain's only major computer manufactur-er, gave ICL's shares an immediate boost last week. But although the publicity value of having a prominent trouble-shooter at the helm will be useful to ICL, Sir Michael has kept a low profile since it was amounced that he would succeed Sir Christopher Laidlaw, who re-tires in April. Sir Michael will become a nonexecutive ICL director next week, moving up to executive deputy chairman in January. Sir Michael has always given remarkably few interviews, other than for specific, strategically important announcements. He has been heavily involved recently as chairman of Mercary, the private-sector telecommunications consortium set up by Cable & Wireless, British Petroleum and Barclays Merchant Bank, Even his colleagues there have not seen him since the ICL appointment was made public. "Sir Michael chose to take some time off when the news broke — which I feel was the act of a wise man," said one Mercury colleague.

Sir Michael Edwardes

Enichem Shuffles Senior Management

· Zurich-based ENI Chemical, the international arm of Italy's stateowned chemical company, has made a number of changes at senior management level. Italo Trapasso, senior executive vice president and managing director, has taken over responsibility for Enichem's operating companies in the pharmaceutical and fine chemicals sectors, assisted by Roberto Passino, who has been appointed coordinator for the two sectors. Marcello Coliff, vice president of Agip S.p.A., has been appointed president of Enichem Polimeri, the Enichem company that combines the activities of Enoxy and the operations Enichem recently acquired from

Meanwhile, a former Montedison Intertrade chief executive, William M. Radolf, has set up a consulting firm in New York. William Rudolf Inc. will provide strategic and commercial advice to multinational companies and financial institutions.

Dow Chemical Europe's New Ventures

Dow Chemical Europe's determination to seek and develop new venture opportunities has been highlighted by the appointment of René Wildi as vice president and director of new ventures, reporting to the president, Frank Popolf. Mr. Wildi, previously vice president and director of sales, remains on the operating board while joining Dow Chemical Europe's executive committee.

Apart from pharmaceuticals and agriculturals, Dow Europe's recent acquisitions and joint ventures will come under Mr. Wildi's supervision. He will also have overall regional resonsibility for Dow's operations in West Germany and Switzerland.

Changes on London Stock Exchange May Rewrite Definition of Jobbers

By Bob Hagerty

LONDON - Samuel Johnson described a jobber as "a man who sells stock in the publick funds and one who does chancework." Two centuries after Dr. Johnson published his dictionary, that definition remains "fairly apt," according to John Robertson, senior partner at the London jobbing firm of Wedd Durlacher Mordaunt & Co.

In the oext few months, though, the government and the Stock Exchange will be doing some hard thinking about how to define the role of jobbers, the dozen firms that act as wholesalers on London's Stock Exchange and have no exact counterpart on any other stock market. As a result, Dr.

Johnson's definition is likely to come under strain.
While they await the effects of Britain's attempt to expose its market to freer competition, jobbers stoutly defend their lucrative role. But they also assert that their dealing skills will put them in a position of strength come what may, and that the new rules should free them to compete more effec-

"If there's to be a new system, we all want to get in and cracking as soon as possible," said Graham Ferguson, a partner at Wedd Durlacher.

Just what sort of system will emerge is unclear. Members of the Stock Exchange meet Oct. 11 to vote on the agreement reached with the government in July to phase out various practices deemed anti-competitive. Assuming the agreement is approved, the exchange and the government will then have to come up with more specific plans for reshaping the market.

Britain's "single capacity" trading system, devised 75 years ago, forbids exchange members from combining the role of broker and jobber. The obbing firm buys and sells shares for its own account and thus acts as a principal in Stock Exchange trades. The brokerage acts only as an agent for the investor and does not trade for its

BHP said on Sept. 19 that it was arranging finance for the acquisition by it and prospective joint venturers of Utah International Inc.'s Queensland coal assets from General Electric Co.

Directors Vote to Liquidate Heller

CHICAGO (NYT) - Walter E. Heller International Corp., a financial holding company that has specialized in lending to small and middle-sized companies, said its directors have voted to liquidate the concern and distribute the proceeds to shareholders.

Citing uncertainty over earnings and interest rates until the dissolution becomes effective sometime in 1984, Franklin A. Cole, Heller's chairman. said Monday that the company could not "project proceeds likely to be distributed to common shareholders." But analysts said they expected the owners to receive between $30 and $32 a share.

Earlier the company had announced agreements to sell all of its operating subsidiaries for about $700 million. The company ran into nouble this year when many of its small clients were unable to repay their

Resurrected IDS Deal Reflects Amex Desire To Enter New Market

NEW YORK - American Express Co.'s decision to resurrect its plan to purchase Alleghany Corp.'s investors Diversified Services Inc. division reflects the company's eagerness to enter a middle market that it currently does not serve. Americae Express, which backed out of a $1-billion bid for Alleghany five weeks ago, an-nounced Monday that it had bought IDS, the Alleghany division it most cherished, for about $773

The original deal to acquire all of Alleghany was a stock purchase in-volving 22.875 million American Express shares then worth $1.01 billion. Mr. Gerstner pointed out that under the accounting and tax treat-ment proposed in the first American Express bid, it could not have sold the steel company for at least two years. "While we're sure it's a very fine steel company, it's not a business we want to be in." Mr. Gerstner said.

Some industry skeptics had also raised questions about the attractiveness of the principal IDS business - personal sales of financial travel and entertainment card opproducts - while privately some American Express officials report edly were disappointed with IDS's limited technology.

But the company's leadership maintains that IDS is perfectly suited to American Express' continuing expansioo of its financial services operations, and Mr. Robinson said the company is "delight ed" to have IDS under its wing.

The agreement leaves Alleghan with only one major asset — its steel company. But F.M. Kirby, Alleghany's chairman, said the arrangement would "greatly accelerate" the company's evolutionary

By Kenneth B. Noble New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Securicharged a former chairman and the current senior vice president of Atari Inc., a unit of Warner Communications, with trading on the basis of illegal insider information just before Warner's announcement last December that its earnings would be lower than expected. Warner's stock fell $16.75 a share on the first day that it traded

The agency charged Monday that Raymond E. Kassar, the former chairman and chief executive of Atari, sold 5,000 Warner shares on Dec. 8, 23 minutes before the company issued e press release announcing that its 1982 results would be "substantially below expectations," due in large part to disappointing Atari sales. Mr. Kassar, without admitting or denying the commission's allegations, agreed to give up $81,875, representing the loss that he avoid-ed by selling his stock before Warner's carnings announcement. The money will be allocated among investors who bought Warner Communications shares on Dec. 8.

Japan's economic recovery lacks vigor as domestic demand remains sluggish

Reflecting the recovery of overseas economies, Japanese exports have been expanding since January this year. The seasonally adjusted customs-cleared export volume index has been on the ascent, though crease in the year-to-year value of exports oo a U.S. dollar basis had been contracting since the start of this year and registered an increase of 0.5% in May followed by a substantial gain of 4.7% in June. Classified by destination, exports to the U.S. and the EC recorded increases of 17.2% and 13.7% respectively. Increased exports of auto-mobiles and VTRs to the U.S. and cars and business machines to the EC contributed greatly to the expansion of the total for those regions.

Exports expanding, but...

On the other hand, imports on a U.S. dollar basis rose 3.0% in Juna over the previous June, 1982. The advance was due greatly to a temporary jump in aircraft purchases (up 353.4%). Excluding those, however, imports in June were down 0.2% from June 1982, suggesting that still sluggish.

An increase in exports and a decrease io imports are fueling Japan's trade surplus. Sea-sonally adjusted trade surplus io May ballooned to $3,350 million, a substantial increase from April's $2,770 million. The current account balance also has been well into the black, million per annum in both April

Domestic demand stagnant It appears that mining and manufacturing production has entered a phase of gentle upswing (see Diagram). This is attributable for the most part to recovery of exports in an addition to progress in inventory adjustment. Production in May, which increased 0.2% after seasonal adjustment over the preceding month, saw a big gain in high-tech and exportoriented industries such as automobiles and electronics.

Because Japao's industrial production depends heavily on exports, which are sensitive to the trend of overseas eco-nomies and vulnerable to trade frictions, it is bard to tell whether the recovery of production will continue at the current high pace.

Plaot and equipment investment by big corporations is showing signs of slackening. while that by amaller businesses has already cooled off. Whereas capital investment by leading firms in fiscal 1982 was up 0.5% over the previous year, that in 1983 is projected to be down 0.4%, according to the Short-term Economic Survey of Principal Corporations conducted by the Bank of Japan in May. By size of manufacturer, investment for 1982 and 1983. actual and projected, is: big companies, up 3.7% and down 3.1%; medium-sized com-panies, down 4.7% and down 13.9%; and smaller companies, down 12.0% and down 18.7%.

Demand in the personal cop-sumption sector is also showing signs of stagnation. In May housing starts were 11.2% fewer than in May 1982, reyear's level for the third consecutive month, According to their seasonally adjusted value (see Diagram), starts io April and May lacked vigor and were barely able to sustain a level of one million units a year, far below the fiscal 1982 level of 1,170,000 units a year. The low level of starts is attributable to the completion of the construction of homes financed with lower-interest loans from the Housing Loao Corporation before the revision of lending terms. Housing construction financed with public loans decreased sharply (by 27.7%) in May compared with May 1982. Stagnancy of personal consumption spending is evident in department store sales and real consumption expenditure of all households, as shown in the household income and expenditure survey (see Diagram). Department store sales in May increased only 2.3% over the previous May, remaining at a low level continuously since April when the gain was 2.5%. Drinks and foodstuffs (up 4.7% from the previous year's level) clothing (up 3.3%) were relatively firm-toned while other categories were sluggish. Real consumption expenditure of all households, as shown in the household budget survey, leveled off after a surge from spring to summer last year, then dipped below the previous year's level io March this year for the first time since December 1981. Although it picked up slightly in April (1.8%), it dipped below the 1962 level again in May (0.9%). Thus personal consumption expenditure

Sluggish consumption spending in May was attributable to a sharp decrease in car purchases as prospective buyers held back to wait for the extension of the interval for mandatory car inspection from two to three years for oew cars purchased on or after July 1, 1983. It was also partly due to a decrease (32.9%) in tobacco purchases resulting from the price hike effective May 1. Slack consumption spending could also be blamed in part on the cold weather that prevailed at the start of summer. Basically, however, the slow-

appears to have run out of down in personal consumption spending is a result of the blunted growth of consumers' income. Since November 1962 the growth of real income and real disposable income of worker households has trended at a low level (see Diagram). The year-to-year increase in real wages lapered off from 4.0% in February to 2.9% in March to 1.9% io April and again to 0.8% in May. A substantial increase io personal consumption spending is unlikely in the future beca the wage hike woo by workers in this year's spring labor offensive was less than 4.5%, because it appears doubtful that Authority's wage-hike proposal be put into effect, and because a meaningful income tax cut is Steering of policy remains difficult policy measures? As in the preceding fiscal year, public works spending is being stepped up, with the aim of concluding 72.5% of the entire year's contracts in the first half of the year. Public works contracts concluded by the end of May were 40.5% of the total and higher than the 39.0% concluded by the same date last year. However, the value of those contracts was ¥3 trillion smaller than in the preceding year. Although there are voices calling for an increase in public works investment for the entire fiscal year, this hardly appears feasible because the Government is under pressure to re-habilitate its deficit-ridden national finances.

The economic and fiscal situation being as they are, the Cabinet on July 12 set the ceiling for budgetary requests for fiscal 1984-10% below the ceiling for fiscal 1983. Although public works were exempt from this ceiling, a cut of 5% was still applied. That being the case, expansion of domestic demand by fiscal outlays appears

In view of the fact that the yen's exchange rate still hovers around ¥240 to the dollar and come bearish, monetary authorities have oot been able to interest rates to stimulate the economy. The government is faced with many problems, as is seen in the indecision over an income tax cut and a pay increase for civil service em-Having run out of effective policy measures, what can the monetary authorities do now? They should give clear-cut direction to long-term economic management, the main cause of entrepreneurs' apprehension. The policy makers should tackle administra tive reform and reduce the ¥ 100 trillion-odd issues of national bonds in the face of mass redemption of bonds which will begin in a little more than a year. Both the Government and the private sector should make all-out efforts to engage these problems io earnest.

PERPETUAL MOTION

By Graeme Gibson. 283 pp. $12.95. St. Martin's Press, 175 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

GRAEME GIBSON, author of "Perpetual Motion," comes highly recommended. Annie Dillard calls his book "An important," Anme Dillard calls its book. "An important, powerful, moving novel," written in "a wholly original idiom." Alice Munro says that "he brings our recent past so marvelously to life—its comedy and darkness, adventure, obsessions, and terrible necessary delusions." According to the beautiful of "Daragues" and "Daragues" of "Da cording to the dust wrapper of "Perpetual Motion," Gibson lives with the novelist Margaret Atwood in Toronto, and I suppose that this too constitutes a literary endorsement.

But after puzzling over his book and swing-ing this way and that, I'm not sure it works. Gibson is so good at description — that disappearing art — that he sometimes seems to get lost in it, to forget what he was driving at, assuming that he had such an object.

An equestrian in a circus has thighs "like the neck of God." At a public hanging, the crowd cries out to the victim to "die like a man!" When they discover that he has refused to give them his last words, they are furious, as if on the brink of death he might have revealed to them a final truth. Robert Fraser, the hero of the book, is obsessed with discovering the secret of perpetual motion, as if he could stop time, or even arrest mortality. When he visits a professor who is also working on this problem, he is stupefied by the magnificence of his machine, which "sprawled serene and immuta-ble, freed by intelligence from all the woes and joys that burden and exhaust the human body."

Robert discovers the bones of a hairy mammoth in a field on his farm and rigs it up in a wagon for a traveling exhibition, which never comes to much. When a flock of pigeons, which he estimates at 8,928,088,000, passes over his land, he becomes rich by supplying the hunters who net them and shoot them down by the millions. Always over the fields can be heard the dying lament of 100,000 orphaned

The machine, the mammoth, the pigeons each of these is a powerful image, well drawn, but I could never discover how they were meant to fit together. One of course can fall back on broad generalizations - the pigeons and the mammoth are elemental forces of nature mocking the perpetual motion machine, the petty lust for progress —but fiction doesn't live by loose generalizations.

One of the troubles with "Perpetual Motion," lies in Gibson's characters. Only Robert is really interesting, his wife and daughter are just shadows - but he stays inside himself so

Alice's Bed Is Sold

The Associated Press

LONDON - A four-poster bed slept in by the girl who inspired Lewis Carroll to write "Alice in Wonderland" has been sold for $24,000 at auction. The bed was part of the contents of Upton House in western England sold by Malcolm St. Clair and his wife, Mary. Mrs. St. Clair is the only granddaughter of Alice Liddell, who was Carroll's model for Alice. A London antique dealer bought the bed but declined to say what he planned to do with resolutely that there is no friction, no contact between the book's people, nothing you can get emotionally engaged in. Robert's mad energy is rather like Gibson's, whose prose too seems bent on perpetual motion without much tangible issue. The book has all the other virtues of what we The book has all the other virtues of what we call regional literature. It's full of sights, sounds, smells, tall tales of children who die of old age, "shrinking like dried fruit, octogenarians before they're eight." There's a reasonable amount of bawdiness, testifying to the robustance of the residence of the lead. amount or bawdiness, iesurying to the robust-ness of those who live close to the land. And Gibson understands the folk speech of the second half of the 19th century. "I sometimes think," a woman says, "the Lord is better pleased with adverbs than nouns." "Clock time," a philosophical watchmaker observes, "emancipates human intelligence from all transcendentals." It's tempting to say that it would he worth your while to read "Perpetual Motion" for its texture alone, but I think that might be expecting too little from fiction. While I'm grateful to Gibson for what he has given me, I also feel that he's added to the general confusion. If he took more interest in his characters, I believe he would find that they would inevitably connect those large, floating metaphors of his. Whatever else you may say about people, they have a propensity for connection.

A Cup Runneth Down Under

By Rick Reilly Los Angeles Times Service NEWPORT, Rhode Island ---One hundred and thirty-two years of tradition unraveled like a 39-cent sock Monday on Rhode Island Sound. Australia II reeled in Liberty on the fifth leg and went on to win Race 7 of the America's Cup by 41 seconds. She was the first challenger to win, taking the cup by four races to three. This is a 12-meter dream," said Ben Lexcen, who designed Australia II's innovative winged keel, which was finally revealed Monday night. "I'm stimned."

Prime Minister Bob Hawke

declared Tuesday a national holiday in Australia, where millions sat up through the night to follow race reports. "Congratulations on your historic achievement," Hawke telegraphed the winners. "You've climbed yachting's Everest, .. and made Australians proud insomniacs." The cup was presented by the New York Yacht Chib to representatives of to the Royal Perth Yacht Club here Tuesday. The NYYC won the cup in 1851 after winning a 17-schooner race around England's Isle of Wight and had defended it successfully 24 times.

The cup will be defended in Indian Ocean waters off Fremantle - about 10 miles south of Perth in - in 1987 or 1988. The prize will now be open to challenges from all U.S. yacht clubs, not just the NYYC.

"And we extend an open invi-tation to the people of Newport and to the people of America to come to Perth and try to win it back," said Alan Bond, who headed the Australian syndicate. "We welcome you."

More than 1,500 boats lined the 24.3-mile course of Rhode Island Sound to witness the first seventh race in cup history. When Australia II crossed the finish line first, it was rushed by a gaggle of yachts, motor boats, spectator vessels and dinghies. Home saluted from some boats and music from the Australian rock group Men at Work blared from others as Australia II cut through the hundreds of greenand-vellow balloons littering the water.

Bond was gracious to the only U.S. skipper ever to lose the America's Cop. "This is to Denmis Conner," said Bond. "If we had to win it — and it took a great effort and a great fight — we're sorry it had to be you."

Conner seemed stunned as he left Liberty's dock an hour and a half after the race. He appeared at a press conference to speak briefly, answering no questions. His voice was unsteady. It finally broke, and tears welled in his eyes when he said, "Today, Aus-tralia II was a better boat. They beat us and we have no excuses, but I don't think there's any rea-son for America to feel they are in any other position but No. 1."

Winning skipper John Ber-trand called the victory "a dream — this was the light of a lifetime."

"The word for us is mate, said Warren Jones of the win-ners' syndicate. "All summer

Liberty, check to Dennis Conner. And today all I can say is,

Checkmate seemed far off indeed for Australia for most of a light-winded day. As in the previous three races, Conner won the start — by eight seconds and took a 29-second lead at the first mark.

Much of that was Bertrand's error, He caught Liberty early in the leg but then allowed his rival to veer to the course's favored left side, where Conner used a little pool-hall local knowledge to catch some wind shifts. Suddenly Bertrand was behind.

That would have meant the race, had Liberty been racing any other boat but Australia II. For although the Americans had a 45-second lead at the second mark, Australia II's speed on the reaching third leg cut it in half. But Conner again out-tacked Bertrand upwind in the fourth leg and entered the fifth with a seemingly invincible 57-second That's when Conner had to sit and watch his nautical life pass before his eyes. With nothing to do but check his spinnaker and hope, Conner saw the Austraians cut the advantage with alarming speed. A mile from the fifth mark, Australia II broke through, taking the lead. "That was the turning point," Conner would say. "There was oot much the 57-second deficit but forged long, we've been playing chess out there. It's been check to the New York Yacht Club, check to ute, 18 seconds and, as Lexcen said, it had nothing to do with a secret keel. "We did it oo a downwind leg, where the keel is nothing more than a hugaboo,"

The sixth and final leg was among the most desperate U.S. vachtsmen will ever have to remember. Liberty tried to tack away from Australia Il's cover 45 times. Each time, the challengers made the same tack to cover Liberty's wind.

Seeking the only possible es-cape, Conner tacked into some of the observer fleet along the right side of the course. The two yachts pushed back hundreds of boats - Conner tacking, Bertrand covering - until, finally, Bertrand found the lay line: Suddenly and simply, he tacked left and Conner's game was up. He had oot broken the Aussies; Bertrand had not made a mistake. Australia II made one linear streak to victory.

"We were just mechanical and professional," Bertrand said of the final half-mile. "But when we crossed the line..." Within 15 seconds, Australia II's support craft, Black Swan, was alongside and Bond, Lexcen and Jones (with a cooler full of aboard. Lexcon hugged Bertrand and a few crewmembers before taking the wheel himself. "I figured I was the first man to steer her," he said, "and I wanted to be the last."

Lexcen said be didn't know if Australia II would be the defending boat in 1987 or '88. "I might build something better," he said.

United Press International EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey - Rob Carpenter rushed for 116 yards and a touchdown, rookie Ali Haji-Sheik kicked a club record 56-yard field goal and the New York Giants capitalized on four turnovers during a 17-point third quarter Monday night in a 27-3 rout of the National Football League Green Bay Packers. The Giants also scored on a 35-yard run with a fumble recovery by Terry Jackson, a 19-yard pass from Scott Brunner to Earnest Gray and a 32-yard field goal. The victory snapped a three-game Giant losing streak against Green Bay and evened both teams' records at 2-2.

began to wonder.

The mothers of some of these hids had probably spent Saturdays hanging out right here in King's Road wearing the outlandish kid uniform of the late 1960s. Miniskirts that barely coverd the hip bones to lure boys in glittering gold velvet trousers fitted snug as a lace glove on an overweight hand. They had outraged moms and dads everywhere in their day, those kids of Swinging London, and the mothers whose hearts they broke ended by smiling as they bought miniskirts for themselves.

Whenever youth's love of fantasy produces one of these outbursts of garish costuming, the word "rebellion" is nowadays invariably applied by social pathologists. If they lion it is. Usually though, there's the troubling suggestion that the kids are ripe for revolution.

Many of the events of the 1960s ary, not only by the kids themselves whose youth excused them for sup-posing that there was some political significance in Dad's buying a Nehru jacket, but also by people like President Nixon's courtiers who were old enough to know bet-

Though dense on King's Road, the kids in the zany hair and the Sad Sack black haven't attracted the armies needed to conquer London, much less the United States. # Gahan Wilson's Teddy and Winnie the Pooh

By Jeffrey Robinson

T ONDON - Gahan Wilson is quick to point out that he was the nephew of a lion tamer, a former lvory Baby, (long before he grew his mustache) and born dead. Declared stillborn, he was revived by a doctor who proclaimed that there would certainly he brain damage. "All of this happened in the Midwest. In the great gothic community of Evanston, Illinois. I love the Midwest. Unlike the South, which boasts of being weird and isn't, the Midwest really is weird but pretends not to be."
For the record, Wilson is the world's best known weird cartoonist, or, rather, creator of weird cartoons. Nancy Winters, who is married to Ga-han Wilson, is a writer and journalist who says she would call herself Nancy Wilson except somebody else is already doing that. They both appear quite normal as they sit comfortably in their suite at the Savoy, taking afternoon tea with some teddy bears. One is named Moreton Hampstead

5p. He lives with them. The other, a family friend, is the original Winnie the Pooh. Winnie lives at Dutton's, the New York publishers. The Wilsons invited him along on a week's holiday in London because Moreton wanted company and even teddy bears enjoy a vacation. "Like most kids who want to be cartoonists," Gahan says while Nancy moves the honey jar closer to Winnie, "when I got old enough I looked around at commercial art schools, but none of them taught you how to draw or how to be funny. So I enrolled myself at the Art Institute of Chicago, 1 was the first person in its history who actually admitted that be intended to be a

And that's what be's always been. Although, back in the 1950s in Greenwich Village, making a living didn't necessarily come with the job. "What you had to do in those days was take your cartoons around to editors. For some reason it was always on Wednesdays. All the other cartoonists in town would be there too. You'd go in to see the editor, one by one, and leave your work with him. Then the next week you'd go back and he'd tell you yes or no. These editors were always saying to me, gee this is great stuff but our readers would never understand it. That was excruciating. There wasn't anything I could say because there is no answer for that."

So he got hungry. "When you're broke and have no credit at all, and have been disconnected several times by the phone company, you get put into a special category. You receive letters that no respectable people ever get. Respectable folk get polite reminders to pay their bills. The rest of us

"Let's see, we've lived in Boston, in the tropical paradise of Key West, in Thoreauvian wilderness on the top of a mountain in Connecticut, and in country chic. That was our last place in Sharon, Connecticut. We had a huge house with seven doors on the ground floor and I'd wake up in the middle of the night wondering if I had locked them all. We left, moving back to New York, when we saw Sharon going downhill. We opened the curtains one morning and knew immediately it was time to move on. There were such as Playboy and the New Yorker. with enough of those piling up — in spite of the fact that be was regularly selling his cartoons to small magazines, sometimes at $7.50 a throw — Wilson went to small English village of the same name. He with a 5p sign around his neck. Last year they threw a party for him. A "Take a Teddy to Tea" party at New York's Algorquin Hotel. By coincidence it was also A.A. Milne's birthday, so this year for "Take a Teddy to Tea II" they asked Winnie to come along.

"We rang Dutton's to see if Wimne was busy that day," Nancy continues, "and they called back to say he'd love to."

In between trips, Nancy is writing her third novel and articles for magazines. Gahan is working on a computer game for a company in California. The world's first ghoulish computer game. "I'm actually drawing directly onto the computer. It's terrific working with a computer. Rem-brandt would have gone nots with it." Unlike the 1950s, these days he gets big money for his cartoons, which are very much in demand. He does 60 or 70 a year

Thinking about such things over tea in a Savoy suite overlooking the Thames, one Gahan Wilson cartoon in particular comes to mind. A family is sitting at the dinner table. On their plates are teddy bears. Everyone is eating them, except one of the children, who is hugging his. A stem looking parent berates the child, "Stop playing with your food."

His work might make you suspect that he stays awake at night, unable to sleep, with all those monsters going bump in his head. "I sleep fine because I get them out mms were ahead of me on the escalator.

One of them had her habit suddenly caught in the machinery. It jammed and cut off. But I turned that into a cartoon where all these people get swallowed up by the esca-lator. So some ideas show up like that. The others just bubble and stew in my mind. It

His latest book, "Is Nothing Sacred?" was published in New York by St. Martin's/Marek, with great one, the tea party comes to an abrupt halt. How gauche to have brought it up. It off everything but the teddy bears. "There in New York by St. Martin's/Marek, with are 18 of them living with us," Gahan says. Gahan Wilson characters on the front covis understandably not Moreton's favorite.

Pierre Cardin Brings Maxim's to Beijing

"Mao never would have allowed this," grumbled an East European journalist. "But why not?" bubbled Pierre Cardin. "My friends said. Pierre, you are crazy.' But voila. 1 have done it. I have brought French culture to China." Cardin presided over the opening Monday night of a Beijing copy of his famous Paris restaurant, Maxim's. More than 100 workmen toiled for six months to turn the site of a former Peking duck restaurant into a clone of Maxim's, down to the nude murals and Art Deco mirrors from France. In the rush to get ready, even Car-din swept the floors before the 350 diplomats and other foreign guests arrived. Hundreds of Chinese gathered outside to stare at the guests arriving in tuxedos and gowns. The guests ate for free but henceforth beijing's only French restaurant will also be its most expensive about $100 a person with wine ensuring that it will cater to forcigners only. Everything came off without a hitch - well, almost. As Cardin arrived and approached the floodlit entrance, a red-uniformed Chinese doorman swung open the door, smiled at the designer and said: "Bonsoir, madame."

James Cagney thinks he may have miffed Humphrey Bogart years ago with poem about one of Bogart's nervous habits. Cagney said in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning America" that be observed Bogart yielding to the habit while they were stopped in their respective cars at a red light. The poem read: "In this silly town of ours / One sees odd primps and poses / But movie stars in fancy cars / Shouldn't pick their noses." Cagney said he sent the poem to Bogie but never got an answer. . .

In Hackensack, New Jersey, the Bergen County Tax Board says the Libyan ambassador to the United Nations who bought a $1-million mansion in Englewood must pay taxes on it this year. The request by Ambassador Ali Treiki to he exempted from paying $14,762 in taxes was denied by tax board member Joan Marray, who ruled that Treiki had failed to pay the required 75 percent before coming before the county board. She said that in order to appeal for exempt status, the bulk of taxes must al-ready have been paid.
